Why Time's Trump Cover Is a Subversive Work of Political Art

Time Magazine's annual "Person of the Year" announcement is, year after year, grossly misunderstood. Time Magazine is clear on its sole criterion – "the person who had the greatest influence, for better or worse, on the events of the year" – yet, do a simple search on Twitter and you will find countless people who seem to think that the "Person of the Year" selection is tantamount to an endorsement. Previous winners have included Joseph Stalin (1939, 1942), Ayatollah Khomeini (1979), Adolf Hitler (1938), and other figures who I think it is safe to assume the Time staff does not endorse.

This year, it should come as no surprise that President-elect Donald Trump was chosen to grace the cover of Time's annual issue (shot by Jewish photographer Nadav Kander). "For better or worse," Trump, during his campaign and now after his election, has certainly been among the greatest influences on the events of the year. For clues as to how Time feels about that question — is it "for better or worse?" — we can look to the image chosen for the cover of the issue. The decisions that Time made regarding how to photograph Trump reveal a layered, nuanced field of references that place the image among, in this viewer's opinion, the magazine's greatest covers.

time At first glance, the man on our July 30, 2018, cover might seem familiar: it was created by morphing images of two of the world's most recognizable men, President Donald Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin. The composite image, by visual artist @nancyburson, is meant to represent this particular moment in U.S. foreign policy, following the pair's recent meeting in Helsinki. As our senior White House correspondent Brian Bennett writes in this week's cover story: "A year and a half into his presidency, Trump's puzzling affinity for #Putin has yet to be explained. #Trump is bruised by the idea that Russian election meddling taints his victory, those close to him say, and can't concede the fact that Russia did try to interfere in the election, regardless of whether it impacted the

How To Spot a Fake TIME Cover

D.W. Pine
Jun 28, 2017

There are more than 4,800 "real" covers of TIME magazine that have been designed over the past 94 years. That's certainly a lot of history, but it may well be dwarfed by all of the "fake" TIME covers that have been produced over the years. Occasionally, these knockoff covers generate real news.

The latest to do so is a fake one from March 1, 2009 featuring an image of President Donald Trump and headline calling his reality TV show "The Apprentice," a "smash." The Washington Post reported Tuesday that the fake cover has been displayed in at least four of President Trump's golf clubs. In fact, there was no cover of TIME on March 1, 2009 and Trump has only been on one cover of TIME (Jan. 16, 1989) prior to running for president.

So, how do you spot a fake TIME cover?

Here's a quick guide:

First the Logo

Most fake covers of TIME get the logo wrong. It's either too

The Typography

Since most of our readers now see the TIME cover digitally—either through our cover animations on Instagram, Facebook or through other social feeds and news stories—the type design of the cover has also transformed. No longer do we feature "rooflines" above the logo that point readers to stories inside. Instead, the cover takes on a poster-like feel with a mission to create a simple and impactful message. In 2009, most of these inside story teasers were placed above the logo and the primary typeface was Benton Bold Condensed, a hand-crafted font modeled after the Franklin Gothic version in use today. As for the heavy use of punctuation: we do like punctuation for emphasis (evident in the use of periods on four recent cover concerning Trump ("Deal With It.", "Meltdown.", "Total Meltdown." and "Nothing to See Here.") But exclamation points and question marks are another thing - particularly the four (!) in use on the fake Trump cover.

In the end, if you're still not sure if it's a real TIME cover, it's best to check the TIME Vault, where every TIME cover is on display.
